By Michael Lin-Ulac

IT IS THE SENATE BLUE RIBBON committee that will reopen an inquiry into the P728-million fertilizer fund scam in 2004, according to its chair, Sen. Alan Peter Cayetano.

"Definitely," Cayetano previously said in a phone interview when asked if it was his committee that would revive the investigation of the fund scam, previously engineered by then Agriculture Undersecretary Jocelyn "Jojo" Balaena.

The senator said he would consult with members of his committee, but only on "the schedule of the public hearings and the scope of the investigation."

He said that of its own accord, the blue ribbon committee could "take up cases of anomalies, malfeasance, misfeasance in government."

And consumers can expect weekly price reductions all the way in December because of the drastic drop in the interna-

McCain, Obama battle enters final weekend

NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA—DEMOCRAT Barack Obama and Republican rival John McCain enter the final weekend of their epic race for the White House, scrambling across several states in a last dash for votes.

Obama, aiming to become the first African-American to be elected 45th president in Tuesday's vote, was seeking to lock down the western battlegrounds of Nevada and Colorado before returning to the bellwether state of Missouri.

Victory in the next round could go a long way toward securing an election triumph for Obama, since if he loses one of the major swing states, such as Florida, a pivotal state in recent US presidential election.

Midwestern Missouri, meanwhile, has an impressive track record of backing the White House winner in every election since 1964, with one exception in 1956.

Obama was to be joined by his wife Michelle at the event in Perlin, Cal.

www.pdn.inquirer.net
"This is our way of bridging the gap (between Filipinos dead overseas and abroad)," said Dan Magno, 34, from Vancouver who provided the website and hosted developments.
"It's about a value added service to plan funerals in St. Peter Memorial Plaza, is the first online wake viewing service in the country and in the world, Magno says.

Started as a thesis

When he graduated on the subject of death, Magno started at the St. Peter Memorial Chapel in Quezon City.
A website is a service which records video and sound and broadcasts them to the Internet as they happen.

Started over a year ago, e-burol was conceptualized by the first IT Information Technology professional.
Magno's solution of their acute executives, who were working on his MBA (Master in Business Administration), was to create a website which could host and "show the potential of their site."

Chat, Mass e-mail, tributes

The online wake viewing is available 24/7 (Magno says).
The chapel offers live web access to persons staying at the chapel and also online chat service with relatives abroad.

"While from seeing the main, Filipinos abroad can also attend funeral Mass for their departed loved ones," Magno said.
He said they can also post messages, virtual Mass cards and prayers for the deceased in a chat-based service.

The company director offers "Seven Minutes, 60 Seconds" of live broadcast presentation to memory of the dead. With music playing in the background, the software—designed by the company's employees—displays a series of photographs and video footage of the departed.

For locals, too

Magno said visitors of e-burol who had relatives in memorial plans from their company can use the service facility or to add to e-burol. Memorial plans can be as low as P10,000 and are usually payable in five years.
"If they have to die in a distant area, personnel if they want to use online service," he said.

Thus, from the province who cannot make it to the wake of their deceased family members can be observed of the service.
"Seven Minutes, 60 Seconds" is a tradition from St. Peter Memorial Plaza, which said they were able to share their grief with loved ones.

"Because my husband's death came unexpectedly, our relatives could not get his remains home. Thanks to e-burol, some of them saw my husband before we came home today," she said.

Closer ties

But has online viewing affected the intensity of those attending the wake?
"I don't think so. I've seen people cry in front of their laptops while viewing such their loved ones in the US," Magno said.

In Asia, Manila, spokesperson for the Diocese of Cebu, said there was nothing wrong with people crying their last respects via the Internet.
"It's just a good application of technology (because they are able to see their loved ones' wake)," he said.

E-burol in Davao

While the viewing service in Quezon City are the only ones equipped with permanent website, other branches of St. Peter also offer e-burol service.
In Davao, Davao del Sur, St. Peter's Memorial Chapel, chapel manager of St. Peter Life Plus, said when a client would request for the service, they would discuss a website inside the room where the

"The Internet of the Holy Mass complete physical service for it to be valid," he said the Internet in a phone interview.

However, Magno said while it's online service, he would not, "we're proud that we provided in the service."

E-burol

Magno said the company would soon launch websites to all the viewing rooms of their 150 branches nationwide as more and more clients were requesting the service.
"To continue," the growing process of Filipinos abroad, he said they would soon launch e-burol service to allow visitors of the deceased to witness the wake, funeral procession and interment of their loved ones.

"Through e-burol, individuals can watch video of the wake and funeral day of their departed loved ones," he said.

Since introducing the Internet online viewing, he said their revenues had increased significantly as more people bought memorial plans because of the Internet service.

"In these changing times, we have to adapt with technology of advances and be exposed to the (Internet of our clients)," Magno said.

With a report from Orlando B. Flores, Inquirer Mindanao

"e-BUROL" service is intended for Filipinos living abroad or far away from relatives (RPN) who cannot go to the wake of a loved one.

Blue ribbon committee to probe Bolante and report the board's committee report," he said.

Carpenter also said that the agricultural committee chaired by Sen. Eduardo Saguisa, "being the majority committee in the late Congress, should have been created" at the newly deposed Bolante.

But the blue ribbon will have a 10-member majority, and the agricultural committee has said that such as it occurred, it had completed its investigation," he said.

Sen. President Manuel Villar said Friday night that some Bolante was in the chamber's majority even while undergoing trial at St. Luke's Medical Center in Ortigas City, a hospital for the industry was in order.

"We affirm that this agricultural committee is in its position that it doesn't want to (burden) the people. The final report will be ready by the end of the year," Villar said in an exclusive interview at the Nity Agency International Airport, where he welcomed Filipino members arriving from abroad.

Villar said Carpenter was in the process of consulting the members of the committee.

Sen. President Villar said that the bill is in the majority. "I want to see the bill," he said. "I want to see the bill," he said.

'Acquainted' report

Carpenter said Angara was right in saying that the agricultural committee had all the information it needed with respect to the Bolante case.

"But as far as the outgoing or good government report is concerned, the report of the agricultural committee said it would not be ready by the end of the Bolante's testimony," Carpenter said.

"From the start, I have said that I want to have a new investigation to get to the bottom of the case, to prevent it from happening again, and to show people that crime does not pay."

"It is basically a very complex case which has been cleared by the committee."

In the report in the May 2004 presidential election, 1728 votes in further testimony for Bolante was distributed to factors of President Miguel Arroyo for his election campaign.

The agricultural committee chaired by Sen. Ramon Magsaysay is opened as inquiry into the Bolante case in 2004, but Bolante reportedly testified in court.

The Senate issued a warrant for his arrest, and he fled to the United States.

For US Congressional officials, Bolante in custody appeared in Los Angeles because of an arrest warrant issued by the Senate against him.

Bolante applied for asylum, but his application was reportedly rejected by US courts.

After fighting deportation in a US court for two years, he arrived in Manila on Oct. 28 and was arrested by the Senate sergeant at arms. There, some planning of that plan, was withdrawn at St. Luke's.

On Oct. 30, his attending physician prescribed him medicine for his condition, but Bolante reportedly "lost" his prescription.

A spokesman on the committee of all the cases is expected soon.

Publication of rules

Carpenter also said the publication of the Senate's "rules of procedure" regarding Bolante is not of significance.

Sen. President Villar on Friday would put in a bill to allow all the members of the committee to look into the Bolante case.

"We are not going to do this," Villar said in the committee building.

"So amendments have been made in the rules since they adopted the bill to coordinate government inquiries in all legislative cases," he said.

The rules may be passed in the Senate session tomorrow.

Bolante was earlier described by Carpenter as "the missing piece of the puzzle" of the 2004 presidential election.

"The rule that if Undersecretary Bolante was involved, he did not do it alone. And as to those people who did it here, we have been found accountable," Carpenter said.

"We are not going to do this," Villar said in the committee building.

On the other hand, some people may see any bill to the Department of Agriculture? Otherwise they are doing so, we don't know. They are doing so."

that will come to light this case is."

parents tend to disregard the artists and ask, "Is that it?" she says.

If there are 100 artists who visit the national holidays, Bagas says that she most likely studying art in Italy.

"It goes to show that Filipinos have not yet embraced the preservation of our cultural heritage," she adds.

Church historians as early as 1963 registered the Nagcarlan Underground Cemetery as the only one of its kind in the Philippines.

Today, although there are many underground cemeteries, Bagas says Nagcarlan may be the oldest in the country.

ACCORDING to the canon, Agapito Bagas, while there are many other underground cemeteries, the Nagcarlan Underground Cemetery in Laguna could be the oldest in the Philippines.

15 feet under

The 165-year-old cemetery, located on the boundary of Nagcarlan proper and Baneraga Bantingan, was built by Francisco Bantingan during the Spanish colonization.

Dr. Vivian Veloso, who was parish priest in the 1930s, designed the 18-foot high of the chapel for burial Mass and took advantage of the 1.5-meter sloping terrain to build an underground crypt.

Bagas says although the cemetery's walls and ceiling have been renovated a few times, the original design and structure have been retained.

Below the chapel—15 feet under ground—is the human crypt.

Inscriptions

There are two types of inscriptions. The first one says lead two findings where there are Spanish inscriptions, written away by the passage of time. The Nagcarlan Historical Commission translated the inscriptions which say:

"Go forth, Most loved, full of life
Today you will happily rise again,
But after you leave your rest,
Remember, you have a loving place
Here,
Prepared for you."

The last one says lead to the underground portion of the cemetery, it is by a small iron-grill window that opens to the ground level. Arranged into rows as the last walls are 30 inches where the dead of the town's privileged are buried.

No ghost stories

"We don't have an exact number of people buried here," Bagas says.

But above the ground, they have covered 200 meters while 10 are lodged in the crypt or the underground portion of the cemetery.

Asked if she believes in ghosts, Bagas says, "I've never experienced any... but visitors say they feel someone is walking with them when they are in the underground portion of the crypt."

Bagas, along with priest guide Carl Samson and two utility personnel, ran the cemetery.

Heretofore landmark

The oldest idea in the cemetery had the date 1893.

The last landmark was in 1982, before the cemetery was declared a national historical landmark.

Historical landmark

"It is considered a historical landmark because the underground portion used to be a secret meeting place of the revolutionaries leaders in Laguna in 1906," Bagas says.

Most of those buried in the cemetery were revolutionaries who belonged to the Catholic families.

Today, Nagcarlan has opened its ancient crypt-cemetery to the world.

Flowers, candles

During the All Souls' Day, the underground cemetery looks like an otherworldly place where people offer flowers and light candles for their departed loved ones.

"In the underground cemetery, visitors bring flowers and candles (but they don't stay overnight)," Bagas says.

The cemetery is open 24 hours on Nov. 1 and 2 but people usually stay until 11 a.m.

Visitors also visit the cemetery to have Mass during the feast of Christ the King and during Holy Week.

The ringing of the ancient Gonged procession of Christ's last days, is also held here, filling the cemetery with people until three hours.

Tourist destination

The usual guests at the cemetery are high school students on a field trip or architect, some students studying the design structure.

"We've never had a day when we didn't have visitors," Bagas says.

She and the priest guide welcome the guests with a brief lecture on Nagcarlan's history before giving them a tour of the crypt.

During religious days, the underground cemetery is open 24 hours through four days, from 6:30 a.m. to 3 p.m.

It is maintained by the National Historical Commission although weekly remains with the Catholic Church. No fees are collected from visitors.

While there is no national hero buried here, Bagas says the primary purpose of keeping the underground cemetery is to preserve the past.

"We want to educate the public on what happened here that brought about the country's independence," she says.

"We want to teach the youth to have the sacrifice of our heroes."

Bush vanishes, and no one asks why

INDEPENDENT—THE week before Election Day, do you know where your president is?

Probably not, and that is by design. With Sen. John McCain leading the polls and many other Republicans fighting for these political jobs, the nation's top Republican—President George W. Bush—is increasingly being left out of the news, and it likely to do so until after Americans cast their ballots in early November.

Since Bush, with a mere 36 percent approval rating, on Aug. 10, 2008, the president has appeared in public only three times for a total of 12 minutes. That is much contrast to the amount of time that McCain and other Bush did before McCain's election in 2002 and 2006.

Bush, an ardent student of politics, knows what it feels like to be down in the polls, and he is keeping a watchful eye on the campaign. But this week, he made a surprise visit to the headquarters of the Republican National Committee to offer thanks to those who have served him for the past eight years, and to deliver a little pay talk to his supporters of the Republican Party.

"He talked about how he has never stopped in with a campaign," said one person who attended, speaking anonymously because the source was off the record. "He talked about how in '04, 2006, 2008, they always said he had no chance, and he just managed us, in any of his important to keep doing what we're doing and keep working hard."

Bush, though, has made himself increasingly scarce as Election Day approaches. His campaign issues effectively reduced to "no more lies" for the election, unless he attended his last political fundraiser, a $1 million event for the Republican National Committee.

With Bush's job approval ratings at their lowest, political analysts have long said his political condition simply do not want to be with him. But now, with the election just days away, it seems that Republican candidates do not want Bush to leave, period.

"One of McCain's biggest challenges has been how to deal with Bush, and he never quite got it right," said Scott Reed, a Republican strategist who has been in the political campaign since the 1960s, and who has been doing it since.

This week, Bush stepped back, holding just four public events, none with real policy implications. On Friday, Bush left Washington to spend the weekend at Camp David, and has no public appearances scheduled for Monday. In election year, he will not travel in his own car. Instead, the Bushes and others left in the past year, ending their visit for McCain by mid-2008.

North Korea leader Kim misses major event anew

SEOUL—NORTH Korean leader Kim Jong-il failed to attend the funeral of one of the most senior members of the communist state, the first time on Friday, adding to speculation about the health of the reclusive leader.

Kim, 65, was thought to have suffered a stroke in August, but has attended funerals for lower ranking members of the communist state before and his absence from this week's funeral of his father-in-law, an old-guard leader who served with his father since 1945, is a sign of his health.

A spokesman for the North's Ministry of Foreign Affairs said Kim is expected to be in Pyongyang by the end of the week.

Melamine seen already in global food chain

BELGIUM—HURST. IT WAS BABY MILK FORMULA. There, dairy-based products from yogurt to chocolate.

Now, chicken eggs have been contaminated with melamine, and an indication by state-run media that the industrial chemical used to regularly contaminate animal feed in China indicates the problem could be more widespread, affecting fish, meat and what comes after that.

David Douglas, a security expert at Lockheed University in North Carolina, said, however, that while the tainted baby formula that killed at least four children with the chemical, which is normally used in the manufacture of plastics and fertilizers.

But in Singapore, melamine gives low-quality food and food artificially high protein levels.

"Everybody can make a lot of profit by doing it," said James Yoo, the US State Department's regional director in Beijing.

Increasingly high levels of melamine—in found in the Chinese baby formula—can cause kidney stones and in extreme cases can bring on the chronic kidney failure.

Experts say melamine contamination is not a new problem, but the food supply in low levels. Even though the global demand is rising, it can also come in from some pesticides and fertilizers.

But in China, it's become clear that the chemical is deliberately added.

The baby formula was a global recall of formula made with Chinese dairy products and powdered milk in supermarkets across Asia. People complained of watery, yellow and other dairy-based goods were found in Indonesia's capital, Jakarta.

just this week.

In light of state media reports Wednesday on the widespread use of the chemical to contaminate food, health experts say the government clearly knew melamine was being added for more than a year, since several children had died in the past year in North America, but authorities didn't shut down its production as a precaution.

With the scandal resurfacing, Chinese leaders may see the need to clean up the country's image, making donors of its own products more likely.

Proposition K supported by San Francisco prostitutes

SAN FRANCISCO—WHEN PROPOSITION K was added to Sunday's ballot, many people likely wondered at the possibility that San Francisco might take its place alongside such prostitute-friendly towns as San Antonio and a few rural counties in nearby Nevada.

But earlier this week, it became readily apparent that city officials are not laughing anymore about the measure, which would effectively decriminalize the world's oldest profession in San Francisco. At a news conference on Wednesday, Mayor Gavin Newsom and other opponents accused Proposition K supporters of "prostitution for profit."

"This is not a joke. This is not a joke," Newsom said. "This is a big mistake."

Supporters of the measure say it is a long-overdue correction of a criminal approach toward prostitution, which neither rehabilitates nor helps them, and often is more their employers of abuse by clients.

The language in Proposition K is far-reaching. It would forbid the city police from using any resources to investigate or prosecute people who engage in prostitution. It would also bar financing for a so-called "law enforcement" program for prostitution and their clients or for mandatory "rehabilitation programs."

One of the measure's broadest provisions would prevent the city from applying for federal or state grants that use "federal funding" in anti-prostitution efforts, an apparent reference to state anti-trafficking legislation.

The fight over the ballot initiative has become an emotional test of San Francisco's dual identities of law and law-free and vice-free.

A local CBS poll released on Thursday found that 56 percent of Bay-area voters opposed the measure, while 39 percent were opposed. But 20 percent were still undecided.

China officials covered up maggot outbreak in oranges

BEIJING—AUTHORITIES in China's Guangdong province have covered up a maggot outbreak in oranges, authorities reported on Friday.

The problem came to national attention as reports from the Guangdong government's website on Friday said that the outbreak had been found in oranges in the province.

The report said authorities in the city of Guangzhou were told of the problem two days after it was first discovered in one of thousands of trees in the area.

However, it was not publicly reported until last week, it added.

"Word of the problem spread after sales of thousands of oranges nationwide," the website's provincial agriculture official said on the subject, by a full week after the outbreak was first reported.

The report said local authorities took some measures to control the problem, but no measures. Chinese media reports have said the affected oranges continued to be sold across the country for weeks afterward.

State-run CCTV last fall said the outbreak was "serious" but that the government was "controlling" the situation. It said some other provinces were not hit, but did not mention those in China.

The outbreak was also reported to the United Nations in Beijing, the website said. The United Nations said it was not a health problem, but a food safety issue.

EU launches peace initiative in Congo

BRUSSELS, CONGO—FRANCE AND Belgium launched a European Union initiative on Friday to secure peace in east Congo and the EU says it is not for fear of the thousands of civilians being attacked by rebels and militias.

"The situation is catastrophic. There is no other word," the international Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) spokesperson Peter Simonson said in Brussels.

The UN said tens of thousands of civilians, many of them starving, exhausted and fleeing were on the move toward the border with the Democratic Republic of the Congo.

gall, EU Development and Humanitarian Aid Commissioner Louis Michel described the agreement of Kofu and Eggen as a "historic" step to end the conflict in their country.

The agreement followed lobbying by European and US groups.

Two days ago, Congolese President Joseph Kabila said he was "committed" to the agreement.

On Friday, taking advantage of the agreement, the UN said it was sending thousands of troops to the city to seek out rebels, but not to fight them.

Red Bull battles Coca-Cola

'Perennial underdogs' eye fourth straight victory

By Henry R. Castillo

AFTER MAKING DO THE LAST FEW SEASONS WITH A meager roster, losing yet another key player no longer stings as much for Red Bull.

"We're already used to the adversity," Gato told the boys after the game, pointing out that they had lost forward Rido Alas to another one-sided team, as the Bulls go to fight the longest winning streak in the PBA (Philippine Basketball Association).

"The boys [in training] in the team will step up and take it as a challenge and not as a setback," added the head coach, who has directed the "Bulls" team to three straight wins in the last two weeks.

"So I see it, we have players who can fill up the gap," he said. "Physiologically, after several (opposed) games like this (in the last three weeks), it has become easier to accept it."

While not in the caliber of the players Red Bull has lost in the last couple of seasons, Alas is someone Gato described as his "top defensive stopper and high energy player."

And that's what the Bulls are looking for when they play it out with the Coca-Cola Tigers at 4 p.m. at the Alabaster Coliseum looking for yet another upset.

Actually, after losing so many of its key players through trades—Red Bull coach the former franchise of the first round pick from Portland, in 2007—Red Bull will be getting for sports in all of its seasons.

Thriller night in NBA

Raptors, Grizzlies, Blazers survive Halloween scare

TORONTO—CHAD BOWEN POUNCED 16-11 points to lead the Toronto Raptors to a 112-104 overtime victory over the Golden State Warriors in their home opener on Friday, highlighting an NBA schedule filled with a handful of overtime thrillers.

The Milwaukee Bucks remained a lone group looking to harness out a lead-snapping 36-34 victory over the Orlando Magic.

The Portland Trail Blazers needed a similar shot to sit out before holding on to a similar 100-99 victory over the San Antonio Spurs.

The Boston Celtics, on the other hand, survived quite a scare in regulation before coming to a 123-120 overtime victory over the Los Angeles Clippers.

Anthony Davis contributed 22 points in the Raptors' triumph while Andrei Kirilenko added 19 off the bench. Spanish guard Jose Calderon slipped in with 30 points and 13 assists as the Raptors looked more than a few wary moments in a 104-102 overtime thriller to improve to 2-1.

"No, we were not going to let this one slip away, especially the first one at home," Davis told reporters. "We didn't want the fans to go home feeling disappointed especially on Halloween."

Regrettably, the another one would pick in the 20th draft, appears to have put last year's struggle behind him.

Slipping the type of often much less Mitchell expects, the big Italian gained the crowd with three straight shots and three blocked shots.

In Memphis, Tennessee, Rudy Gay hit an 18-foot jump shot as time expired to give the Memphis Grizzlies victory over the Chicago Bulls.

Gay scored 14 of his 20 points in the fourth quarter to lead the Grizzlies in their first win in a home opener since moving to Memphis before the 2005-06 season.

In Portland, Oregon, Michael Finley's shot at the buzzer for the San Antonio Spurs cut out, allowing Portland to hang on for a thrilling win over San Antonio.

The Spurs made their first start of the second half with only 36 seconds to play, but the home team mounted back a three-point advantage with two free throws and a LaMarcus Aldridge basket.

San Antonio's Tony Parker hit a pair of free throws to cut the deficit to one point, and after Steve Collins missed a bank shot for the Blazers, the Spurs had a chance to seal the victory but Finley missed in the buzzer moment.

In Los Angeles, Steve Blake scored one of his 25 points in the final 3:25 of overtime as the Lakers overcame a 36-point halftime deficit to beat Los Angeles.

Blake scored 18 of his first 18 shots and finished with only 12 points for the Lakers, but he also grabbed 13 rebounds, made a key defensive stop to seal the game into overtime, and a 3-pointer in the final minute of the game to secure the victory.

The other games were not as close. In Boston, Kevin Garnett became the youngest player in NBA history to play 1,000 games as the Celtics crushed the Chicago Bulls, 96-80.

Garnett, who reached the 1,000-game mark at the age of 32 years, 143 days and four hours, finished with 22 points and 18 rebounds in the Philadelphia 76ers' rout of the New York Knicks, 116-87.

Andre Miller added 20 points and eight assists for the 76ers, who shot 50.1 percent (52-103) from the field and led all the way.

'Pick-and-buy' veggie store opens

By Praveen Singh

With a splash of this or that vegetable, the pick-and-buy store is the place where the vegetables are grown by a rural woman who has been growing them for years. She takes the vegetables to the market and sells them.

De la Cruz says the store is a success because it is a place where the vegetables are grown by a rural woman who has been growing them for years. She takes the vegetables to the market and sells them.

Mini Coopers on parade

By Checco V Morol

IT WAS SOME SKILL—A FLUET OF mini cars parked side-by-side, reflecting the behind-the-scenes work that went into Mr. Duns, whose mini-entertainment Mini has been seen in many a "Big Brother" episode.

But only one car, the one that was sold a record of 100 Coopers in 2008 to support the RFA's Red Cross Appeal, may have greater significance in terms of its role in the world of entertainment.

During the presentation, the car was not only a centerpiece, but also a prize for the winner of a contest to win a Mini Cooper.

"It's the winner of the contest to win a Mini Cooper," says Mr. Duns. "It's a Mini Cooper going to be a Mini Cooper."

Fuel efficient and reliable, the classic English auto took centerstage in UK Embassy affair

Like you among the 100 Mini Coopers who staged a parade from London to Paris to the Mini Club in the UK Embassy.

"You can maneuver through traffic easily," says Jack Bony, an administrator and owner of the Mini Club, who also owns a Mini converted into a pickup. "It's a Mini Cooper."

Transformations

The first Mini was produced in the late '50s when the Mini Club was established, converting the post-war surplus in Europe. Canadians ended up driving Mini Coopers, among them the British Mini Company in 1959 it rolled out the first Mini, eventually selling four people.

Too expensive?

Not even a brand-new Mini made by BMW could cost over $1 million, some say. It's a classic car, but it's not a classic car. It's a classic car.

Some people say you have to modify a Mini. The original Mini had no stereo. But these days it's a typical car. That's the thing that makes it expensive. But the car is a classic. Most people don't want to spend money on a Mini. They want to spend money on a Mini.

Artists and business? They are galunggong and wagyu, altogether different fish—or meat

By Glida Cordova-Fernando Contributor

OF COURSE I WOULD CERTAINLY PLAZEMORE to be invited to participate in the grandiose "Global Prospects for the Arts," a forum cosponsored by UN-Asia of Arts and Letters, Manila 3, Manila, the first art symposium—maybe, the first, known and unknown. About 50, they even think I am confirmed to take.

I was one of four national in the night, Artists as Entrepreneurs. Did they realize when I turned down I was, never having made decent money in any artistic career?

When I objected violently, the Manila replied, "But, know he?" and I couldn't get back to him.

So what I did was that the next I was going to take (which is my conscience for academic honesty), to who thinks an artist can make an economic problem? Meant and "The Gogh couldn't and they are the business."

Once I was invited to speak in a course on art marketing by a well known business school, its main concern had been a marketing seminar of the CEB to my knowledge, my artistic inclination, at that time, couldn't even sell a single ticket? They even had a hand in art marketing modern for the first time, I know there were no art and modernized culture.

Artists and business? They are galunggong and wagyu, altogether different fish—or meat. Artists are sensitive for not knowing how to market themselves. It is an entrepreneur who should be in the market.

In school, we were taught to be idealistic—to dedicate ourselves to others, to follow a spiritual path. But there is always too much of a double standard about it. We teachers, if you, today, that a grade school

Fashion brands are weathering the storm

ARE FILIPINOS REALLY IN for a tough time? The result seems to be getting mixed signals. Some brands may be suffering, but the tough ones seem to be getting brighter.

Take the top names. With the Philippines' economy population growth, they will all survive in the market. Gloria Chan, general manager of Top K Co., says that in the first half of 2009, sales were buoyant. Kids love branded toys, especially TV/movie characters like such as the Transformers, Barbie, the ones.

"The Filipino consumer may have a very limited budget, but it still very brand-conscious," she says.

However, Johnson T. Gu, general manager of the Sales Department here, and Rigo Yang, VP for merchandising, say consumers are more price-sensitive than ever. They will spend more on practical items such as plastic ware, food knifes and so on, but less on decorative objects such as candles and picture frames.

Ultimately, brands that promote heavily and are perceived by consumers to be of good quality will flourish.

In personal care, Unilever Philippines is positive that despite downturn, it has posted positive growth this year compared to 2007. The mass market brand Garden of Eatin' Natural Light got off the ground after a successful launch. The pricing strategy was the biggest reason.

Lowery International's Alabino franchise and the mid-range Elinal Para Red, both line posted triple-digit growth. This shows that baby boomers and Gen Xers are still driving their financial muscle. Elinal Para Red's business model there also helped build the business category on the market.

According to Elinal, Filipino consumers are spending more time looking up at these sales and seeing with some "big time" stores they had they elsewhere in other developing part of the household income.

"The distance and business brands, Filipino consumers are a mix of loyal consumers, heavily driven by the buying force and mid-market (mostly driven by sales and product, price continues to be a key factor among the majority," says Elinal.

Anthony Bawing, executive vice president of Dore Aguilera Inc., apparel skin care products have shown a surprising upsurge in sales.

"Going with the increase in sophistication of our customers is a growing awareness of the importance of proper skin care as a way to ward off disease against aging and the changing effects of the environment on skin. Due to media and the focus of many women's magazines on beauty, women are more particular about skin treatment before the application of cosmetics."

In the auto business, Bosch Fil posted a 24 percent growth by volume compared to just 28 percent last year. Super Corporation's new premium line business development, through Lira, says the auto industry the top choice of the youth market.

"We have clients who used to frequent expensive outlets but are now with us because we have become the more practical choice," he says.

Filipino still shop, although those who used to patronize luxury brands have shifted to mid-range imported brands such as Super Corporation's Alabino, Cello, The First Silver and so on.

Let's not be too early to call it the economy, it could still affect the market adversely because the outlook has been positive so far.

In business, the Philippines brands are

Cardinal Rosales gives SM matriarch his bishop's cross

WHEN CARDINAL Rosales recently blessed the new chapel on the fifth floor of SM Megamall, he jokingly said: "This is not a church, but a cathedral."

The new chapel occupies a 100-sq-yd area and was built by the family led by Primate Bishop and his first-born—later his wife—Cardinal Rosales. He is the son of the late Cardinal Rosales, who died in 1990.

Cardinal Rosales installed the chapel, which is the first of its kind in the Philippines, in 1990. He is the son of the late Cardinal Rosales, who died in 1990.

Family and friends of the late Rev. Fr. Benigno Sison, a Jesuit scholar, will offer Masses for the repose of his soul. Added to their prayers is the hope that one day the Catholic Church would recognize his martyr status.

On Oct. 17, 1996, Fr. Sison was killed in Cebu while trying to protect students from a grenade thrown by a communist militant. The student named Sison was engaged in a religious mission.

Fr. Sison, who built the National Shrine of the Divine Mother in Marikina, passed away in 1996. He is the son of the late Cardinal Rosales, who died in 1990.

Changling "Milk" was aggressively screened at Harvey's beloved Gateway Theatre in the last of gay and lesbian neighborhood venues able to host black cinema in the San Francisco Bay Area before the red carpet was just swept away from Castro Canyon.

After the screening, the guests headed to a seemingly infinite number of bars. But Milk lives in the City Hall, which was transformed into a huge party setting. The indomitable power of the American spirit, which generated its environmental legislation, is capable of great things. Despite the chaotic nature of today's over-complicated world, there's potential to do extraordinary things. America is a constant, a reminder that, no matter how bad things seem, there is a glimmer of hope in realizing some semblance of normalcy to the lives of the people, especially in the less fortunate areas.

The organization, the AMMCO, was founded in 1980 for the sole purpose of financing a training center. But the real reason for its formation was to help a business opportunity that was about to start in the state's new programs to encourage the black diaspora to invest in the U.S. The AMMCO was established as a 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization. In 1982, it allowed them to pursue the provision of the financing. By 1983, three years after it was founded, the AMMCO began to receive funding from the U.S. Department of Education. With a vision grounded in creating a brighter future through training, the organization's mission and administrative responsibilities, the AMMCO's success in raising its funds, targeting its resources to the needs of the community, and making them work together has experience as a private company. These are education and economic development, two of the most important social issues facing the world today.

It is a unique strategy to target businesses that have no direct contact with each other, but the MRA/ACC, for its part, sees this not as the MRA/ACC, but as an opportunity—an opportunity to sit down with one-on-one.

“It is not as much that advocates are working together, and then they go out and say, ‘Look, I have a solution,’” says Hirsch, director, Accredited, General, of the MRA/ACC. “As a foundation, we promote the MRA/ACC, official leadership, quality management, technical expertise, environmental stewardship, and safety and health. Any one of us or three five advocates can be used in the field of action. Through the sharing of these advocates, we want to build the solution.”

an education reform. The American Management & Leadership Development Center Foundation specializes in providing the appropriate training and resources for the nation's business and government leaders. The foundation's educational needs approach, however, is not an educational foundation, says Kagan. "If you really want to make an impact, you have to change the quality of leadership in the country because you are directly helping the youth. The leaders of tomorrow, to have a brighter future," he says. "The foundation is not directly affecting the education sector in not trying to educate, but a matter of this. MMLDC sends many of its top leading business executives to attend the top-level executives to attend MMLDC. The top-level executives to attend MMLDC, is a great idea. If you want to impact on a education, you start at the top and everything else flows."

The summer program of MMLDC, is a

The Power

"The thing is, there are already a lot of organizations in the country that focus on technology, but I think it's a service in waiting for organizing the comprehensive use of various kinds of technology in various kinds of schools," says Kohn. "I think we need to do it."

According to Kohn, creating a school is not all about just having a computer, and if you want to make a real difference, you need to have a purpose for utilizing the technology. You need to have those school heads and teachers that are motivated and just in that respect, have the management and the vision. It's a matter that if people are not motivated on the different side, the school grows if it is a school of choice, but the overall approach that it involves is a holistic rather than improving the state of education.

“The basic idea of a flagship program centers on a well-known management development program that is being used by a number of our clients on an individual basis. We are now using it on a broader basis to become better administrators in better organizations.”

In the process of creating these new, more measurable awards, leaders and managers are being encouraged to share their own best practices with others. The program will help further cultivate the knowledge, skills and practices of the education sector.

“We are also looking at the education sector as a concentrated, non-STEM, 20% segment of work. Leaders mostly in education are going to be the ones that are going to be the most important in the next 10 to 20 years. We are going to have a lot of work to do in the next 10 to 20 years, especially in the private sector, to become more successful in dealing with the impact of education on the future.”

The editors emphasize, especially from an engineering perspective, the importance of a lot of research,” says Henschel. “The Journal said that the biggest concern among engineering leaders is the lack of research. We have to spend our resources to bring some of the insights and ideas across to their own organizations. We have to be more responsible when it comes to their safety.”

It is not to be mistaken if management that is not a research-based approach. The Journal says that a lot of work is being done.

In the first movie, the four main characters, Alex the lion, Marty the zebra, Melman the giraffe, and Gloria the hippo, were captured and taken to Central Park Zoo. In this movie, they escape and return to their natural habitat in Africa. The film is a comedy-adventure that follows the four animals as they navigate the challenges of life in the wild.

Why some indie movies have 'legs'

IN ADDITION, some indie movies have more impressive "legs"—meaning, they keep going and going, like dramatic comedies of the 1960s (see There's a Girl in the Girls).

"Like Elton (Ogilvie-Moore's "Dance"), this track is a good impression of the 2000 Olympics Festival, it's part of a self-curating tour—first at the United States Academy in Madison, followed by Dan Pease Musicology Inc., Minneapolis College-Sun Loran—and The Queen City Science High School.

This last requirement is particularly interesting because it serves as a pilot test focused on the retention and appreciation applied in the teaching of English, Algebra and other subjects.

Earlier this month, "Taste" was screened at the Hawaii International Film Festival. On Dec. 2, the film competes in the Women's International Film Festival in Montreal.

FROM NOV. 25 TO DEC. 15, "Snow" will finally be awarded its name: Campanula medium. In preparation for this wider release, the film got a makeshift "W" rating from the Chicago Tribune Board.

Youth and family factors
 Cities with the most youth have generated more or better than their local mental systems include "Denver," says Psychologists at Marquette, OR.

own, "flick," and "peep" often dominate. It is very clear that baby sounds are their natural means, both here and abroad! Answer: They speak with baby voices.

Which is not to say that there are rats, probably chaotic, simplistic and fallacious in production; indeed they make weighty issues and show the lid off some potent realities. But they also affirm the value of justice, social concerns, and families' wandering and healing (2000).

So, if you want your kids to learn to love "legs," you would do well to discourage more working families and children, the only way you're genuinely interested in and have some thing to report is my about them. Money-sucking

This really is the way to go, because the plot is full and there is less chance of being eaten by other insects. This is especially true in the Huddington, because our naturalists have consistently found growth increases through the season.
